

Prosperity

Prosperity (from Latin. Pro-speró, prospectus, prosperity) means a desirable state where things are put and developed and give good hope for the future. In modern use, the word came from English (prosperity) and its importance narrowed to economic benefit, development, boom. At present, there is controversy over whether or not to measure prosperity or measure: on the one hand, the most commonly used indicator of economic boom is gross domestic product (GDP, GDP); Therefore, even in macroeconomic research, different expectation indices are identified, for example between entrepreneurs and consumers. But other authors argue that this is too narrow and does not correspond to the meaning of the word. Influential American thinker Francis Fukuyama pointed out the importance of trust for the prosperity of society.

The following is given in the Czech etymological dictionary: „abundant, abundance. Col. (Old Bohemian) hush“ abundance „of psl (glorious) * goj t of the same meaning. According to this interpretation, the old Czech word hoj came from the Pralovan word gojoj, and from it, the gradual changes resulted in the expression „abundance“

We also give an explanation of the word „hoj“, which was previously referred to in the previous entry.

„hoj citosl. It is associated with psl.“ gojovan „abundance“, but rather it is only a natural expression of emotions like hey ap. „ In the Brief etymological dictionary of the Czech language there is also a note in this motto: „The meaning of joy associated with the feeling of abundance“.

According to this note, it could be said that the word „abundance“ could arise from an interjection that expressed joy in the abundance of something (wealth).

However, this etymological interpretation is not 100%, in the „abundant“ slogan mentioned above there was a note in the Czech etymological dictionary that this expression is not substantiated and
